THE announcement that Mr. GINEONS ha heen interdicted from the performance of his duties as Registrar of the Supreme Court wili take no one by surprise. With regard to the justice of the measure, that is a matter | kept dark. as to which there may well be a difference of opinion, but it was a foregone conclusion Francisco on the 24th, and the British sh that if the Executive did take action, which it seemed very unwilling to do, the weaker of the two disputants would go to the wall. The question will, as a matter of course, be referred home, when its merits no doubt will be thoroughly gone into; the result will be awaited with interest by all and with a mea sure of anxiety by some. Many rumours have been current as to what has passed behind the scenes; amongst others one to the effect that the Executive, when the matter first came before them, arrived at the conclusion that they could not suspend one of the officials concerned without suspending both. How far this may be true we are not in a position to state, but such a course would not, we think, have appeared to the public in disaccord with justice. The plan of interdicting one of the belligerents from the performance of his duties has apparently been adopted as an intermediary course, less for the purpose of marking disapproval of the interdicted officer than of removing | Corea. With regard to the attitude Mr. Gibrons assumed in relation to some of the matters in dispute there can be no reasonable doubt of its correctness. To take the case of HUFFAM, for instance, however agreeable to private feeling thought that after the frauds disclosed signed it. and the consequent scandal, the fullest publicity in all the proceedings would have been courted. We do not say there has been studied concealment, but some of the proceedings which have been conducted open Court had the Judge thought proper but it has apparently been no part of the Chief Justice's purpose to court publicity. As illustrative of this it is a notable fact that one of the cases which the Chief Justice insisted. on taking in Chambers, was transferred into open court by Mr. Justice Snowden when the cases were made over to him, His vices. The case was dismissed Snownen's individual share in this unfortunate difference, is that he lends his official support to the Chief Justice's side of the question, we are pleased to observe that His offered to pay on production of proper vonchers arrival on shore and stripped of almost all that Honour had the independence to remove the case referred to from Chambers into open Court acting upon his own opinion as to the propriety of giving that particular case publicity, the Chief Justice's insistence to the contrary notwithstanding.

As will be observed, by the telegrams reproduced from the American papers which arrived on Saturday, the condition of Ireland is becoming truly deplorable. LOSS OF THE FRENCH BARQUE " TAFFARETTE"

SUMMER TWILIGHT. Ah! what an hour of ecstasy is this! When all of Nature in our view is shrinking From the too ardest sun's retiring kiss, And fast in twilight's clasp her hand is linking. When from the joyous wood come thrilling out, Tossed on the air that drowaily is hearkening. A storm of melody, a silver rout Of gorgoous sounds—no sombre touches darkening. The gay, clear tons at intervals that guah From blackbird's throat, so limpid, pure and thrilling, The wild, bewitching prayer-notes of the thrush, ... Now trembling lov, now high in quavers thrilling. The tiny; rippling warble of the wren ; . The chaffinch's short, swiftly-tuned gladness; The muffled call of suckoss from the glen; The wood-dove's shadowy, far-of coo of madness. While neath these, to the horizon spread, 'Circled by hills, and gem-encrusted mendows Heaped with seeming gold-dust, thickly shed By sprinkling fingers, hid by nearing shadows. The gallant knights that guard the western plains Of the sun's kinglom, send their amber lances Quivering across the sky, till Night restrains Their pastime, and her serconing wing advances. Sweying the clemn heads of mighty trees, The zephyr's round them sweep with restless eightig The timourous apens shiver in the brocce, Its lack of restalegend quaintsupplying. It is, that choses from all else, its wood In ages past to form the Cross was taken. That shuddering and apart it since has stood,

With wild regret from leaf to libro chaken.

To the wild rosse at its base, that gleam

Now to the north the keen and vivid sky Doth hold upon its lap a gleaning jewel;

So wan and pale from out their duaky setting.

It whispers: "Fear not; soon again shall beam

Your heads and the sunlight's golden notting."

In this part of Europe the gipsy is to be seen in the purest type, strongly resembling the mulatto, except that the eye is generally more liquid, like that of the Spanish or Italian race. As a rule, the men are finer looking than the women, their pictures que costume, gold earnings, and long curls adding greatly to their good looks. Once is a while, however, one sees among the young girls a real for Cleopaira, but usually their principal attraction lies in their peculiar dress—a bright the present day), bread, onions, leeks, pepper, ceeded in opening them, when the eyes aphandkerchief wound around the blackest of and cloves. 1st, Boar's head, beef, mutton, peared quite motionless and glazed. After with gold pine, dangling or naments, and sometimes a bunch of flowers. Their dress seems composed of a single garment, but odds and ends of every variety of colour and material. How a gipsy toilet is made excited our curiosity, while baffling even our feminine comprehension. Their finery and trinkets, of which they are very fond—even the men indulging in such adornments-are of rather a tawdry description, and cleanliness does not appear to be a favourite virtue among them. Many of the gipsies have beautiful houses and extensive estates in Siebenburgen; are rich, not only in money and lands, but possess treasures in plate and rure old furniture, for which they may well be envied.
